

AML/CFT Public Statement

HR Consulting Services

This statement explains why Bird & Yang may ask clients to provide identity, authority, business, employee, payment, and related information before or during HR consulting services.

Why we may ask for information

HR consulting is not normally an AML/CFT (the Anti-Money Laundering and Countering Financing of Terrorism) reporting service by itself. However, we may still ask for identification, authority, business ownership, and payment information for client acceptance, conflict checks, sanctions or fraud prevention, privacy compliance, invoicing, and internal risk management.

If your HR matter is connected with legal, accounting, insurance, immigration, restructuring, transaction, or other services, additional AML/CFT or due diligence requirements may apply.

Information we may request

Depending on the matter, we may ask for company or business information, proof of identity for authorized persons, evidence of authority to instruct us, contact details, billing information, business structure information, and information needed to understand the nature and purpose of the HR engagement.

Where we receive employee or applicant information, we may ask you to confirm that you are authorized to provide that information and that it is being handled consistently with applicable privacy and employment obligations.

Source of funds and payments

For routine HR consulting, source of funds or source of wealth information will not usually be required. We may ask questions about payment source or supporting information if required by law, internal procedures, unusual payment arrangements, overseas funding, sanctions risk, or if the matter connects with another Bird & Yang service requiring enhanced checks.

When information must be provided

We may be unable to start or continue HR consulting work until required client acceptance, authority, conflict, or identity checks are completed to our satisfaction.

How we protect information

We treat client, business, employee, applicant, and HR information confidentially and securely. We will use and disclose information only for the agreed services, administration, compliance, or where authorized, required, or permitted by law.

Our approach

We take a practical, risk-based approach to client verification and sensitive information handling. We may update checks if the client, authorized contact, ownership, payment arrangements, or scope of work changes.
