

AML/CFT Public Statement

Insurance Services

This statement explains why Bird & Yang may ask clients to provide identity, authority, business, payment, and insurance-related information before or during insurance services.

Why we may ask for information

For insurance services, we may need to verify identity, authority, ownership, contact details, payment information, and other client information for insurer requirements, regulatory obligations, client acceptance, sanctions screening, fraud prevention, privacy compliance, and internal risk management.

Some insurance or related financial service arrangements may require additional checks. If a matter involves another Bird & Yang division, such as legal or accounting services, additional AML/CFT (the Anti-Money Laundering and Countering Financing of Terrorism) checks may be required under that division's obligations.

Information we may request

Depending on the service, we may ask for proof of identity, proof of address, business or company information, details of beneficial owners or authorized persons, insurance history, claim history, source of premium payments, and information needed by insurers or product providers.

For companies, trusts, partnerships, or organizations, we may ask for information about directors, trustees, shareholders, beneficial owners, controllers, authorized contacts, and persons giving instructions.

Source of funds and insurance payments

Where relevant, source of funds generally means the origin of money used to pay premiums, deposits, or other insurance-related payments. This may include salary, business income, savings, loan proceeds, or other lawful sources.

We may ask for supporting documents if required by an insurer, product provider, law, regulator, or our internal procedures.

When information must be provided

We may be unable to obtain quotes, submit applications, maintain a policy, assist with a claim, or continue acting until required information has been provided and verified to our satisfaction.

Providing complete and accurate information promptly helps avoid delays and reduces the risk of insurance cover being affected.

How we protect information

We treat client, insurance, and compliance information confidentially and securely. Information may be shared with insurers, underwriters, assessors, premium funders, regulators, dispute resolution providers, and approved service providers where reasonably required or permitted by law.

Our approach

We take a practical and risk-based approach to client verification. We may ask follow-up questions, request additional documents, conduct public register or database checks, or update information during the relationship.
